No. 22 State Street, Boston.

IN the annexed letter, addressed by the Commissioner of Patents to the Editor of the Patent Office, it is decided that the 10th sec. Act of '37,

WASHINGTON, JULY 21, 1849.

Dear Sir—The Supreme Court of the United States, at the present December term, has decided that the 10th section of the Act of 1837, which requires the Commissioner of Patents to issue patents to aliens who have resided two years in the United States, and have made oath of their intention to become citizens, is constitutional. Under this decision, I shall issue patents to aliens who have resided two years in the United States, and have made oath of their intention to become citizens, and who have complied with the other requirements of the law. Yours, respectfully,

JOHN E. WILDER, Esq.

Dear Sir—The Safe purchased of you in 1848, has proved entirely fire proof. The books and papers were in the building when it was destroyed by fire on the night of the 25th inst. The safe was opened on the following morning, and the contents found to be perfectly preserved. I have now in use three of your Safes, and consider them the best in the market. Respectfully yours,

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 14, 1850.

New York Correspondence.

To the Editor of the Whig and Courier

Reception of Senators Foote and Downs—Daniel Webster—The Work of Clergymen at the Tabernacle, and Closing up of Bishop Hughes.

NEW YORK, Dec. 10.

The Committee of Safety appointed at the celebrated Castle Garden Meeting that held, are determined to save the Union, so that Bangorians need be alarmed for the safety of our glorious Republic. It will, I doubt not, ere year, at least, and the Star Spangled Banner will continue to float over Massachusetts, South Carolina, California, Utah and all the other States and territories. Yesterday noon the Governor's Room was densely crowded by those anxious to see and hear Gen. Foote and Downs speak in behalf of the Union. As I was standing upon the stairs leading to the Governor's Room, an elderly, somewhat fat gentleman came up and inquired of me if Senator Foote had spoken. I told him he had. "Well," he replied, while a fresh smile played over his fat countenance, "thank you," in the drawl of a regular down east Yankee, "I reckon I will go in," he answered, cocking his left eye and smiling. He did go in and I followed. He seemed to face the pistol smooth. Soon after we bowed our way into the room, Ogden Hoffman, Esq., one of the old school Senators from this State, had just addressed Senators Foote and Downs and welcomed them to New York. The speaker made a very eloquent address and was greeted with rounds of applause from the vast multitude that stood thick around him.

Mr. Foote was then loudly called for and responded to in a very animated speech of considerable length. He alluded to the feeling of Mississippi, and asserted to hearers that the people of the State were strongly in favor of the Union. Gen. Foote is a small sized, bald-headed man, with a military countenance and a good deal of energy in his manner. He is not so eloquent in his speaking as Mr. Hoffman, but he delivers to quit off some sharp sentences as well as rounded periods. He spoke in high tones of the Castle Garden Meeting, and said it had a most salutary effect upon the South. He said he was willing to make any and every sacrifice to preserve the Union.

Senator Downs' speech was not quite so satisfactory to the audience as Gen. Foote's, for he showed more partizan feeling which was altogether out of place on such an occasion. In the course of Foote's remarks, he mentioned the name of Webster which produced loud demonstrations of applause. Downs, it would seem, rather avoided the great statesman's name, but spoke more freely of Clay and Dickinson. In that he exhibited a very great prudence which did not exactly please the majority of hearers. The name of Daniel Webster, whenever spoken in these diggings, produces a good deal of enthusiasm. And let me say to your readers that a strong feeling in this quarter is manifested to elevate the Great Defender to the Presidential chair in 1852. What would the people of Maine say to that? Are they not now ready to vote for a man for President whose intellect and statesmanship are freely acknowledged all over the civilized world? It is supposed by many and believed to a great extent, in fixing the public pulse, that we have a case of a President remarkable for his mental and civil qualifications. It seems to me such a supposition implies a slur upon the people who will always do right if they can have a clear head and far sight.

The time has now come when every man can place on record his influence and power and vote. If the young men and working politicians would let the mere name alone as a party test, and be individual, throwing dust into their eyes and exciting their passions and prejudices, the people would then fully vote for such a man as Daniel Webster for President. I spoke plainly to say that I could not now command the vote of his own State. I don't believe a single vote of all the people of the Old Bay State are left to be redeemed. Why, what has Webster done to forfeit the confidence of Mass. Whigs? Is he in favor of human bondage? Who can point to a single sentence he has ever uttered in public or private which can be considered in favor of slavery in any form? Not one solitary man can do it. I will now perform a task for Webster's opponents, although the last quarter of an hour's speaking has nothing but freedom here and everywhere. Can it be possible that the people of Massachusetts would so quickly cast off the love of liberty, cherished by the forefathers of their free State and country, for which Americans only have contended with the sword of battle, and which they have defended with the best of their blood, and which they have purchased with the treasure of their hearts, and which they have sealed with the tears of their eyes, and which they have consecrated with the prayers of their souls, and which they have established with the sacrifice of their lives, and which they have defended with the strength of their arms, and which they have maintained with the wisdom of their minds, and which they have secured with the power of their hands, and which they have cemented with the love of their hearts, and which they have sanctified with the devotion of their souls, and which they have made glorious with the deeds of their lives, and which they have made free with the blood of their veins, and which they have made immortal with the memory of their deaths, and which they have made sacred with the tears of their children, and which they have made holy with the prayers of their mothers, and which they have made dear with the love of their wives, and which they have made strong with the faith of their fathers, and which they have made great with the glory of their ancestors, and which they have made beautiful with the hopes of their posterity, and which they have made blessed with the favor of their God? Can it be possible that the people of Massachusetts will so quickly cast off the love of liberty, cherished by the forefathers of their free State and country, for which Americans only have contended with the sword of battle, and which they have defended with the best of their blood, and which they have purchased with the treasure of their hearts, and which they have sealed with the tears of their eyes, and which they have consecrated with the prayers of their souls, and which they have established with the sacrifice of their lives, and which they have defended with the strength of their arms, and which they have maintained with the wisdom of their minds, and which they have secured with the power of their hands, and which they have cemented with the love of their hearts, and which they have sanctified with the devotion of their souls, and which they have made glorious with the deeds of their lives, and which they have made free with the blood of their veins, and which they have made immortal with the memory of their deaths, and which they have made sacred with the tears of their children, and which they have made holy with the prayers of their mothers, and which they have made dear with the love of their wives, and which they have made strong with the faith of their fathers, and which they have made great with the glory of their ancestors, and which they have made beautiful with the hopes of their posterity, and which they have made blessed with the favor of their God? Can it be possible that the people of Massachusetts will so quickly cast off the love of liberty, cherished by the forefathers of their free State and country, for which Americans only have contended with the sword of battle, and which they have defended with the best of their blood, and which they have purchased with the treasure of their hearts, and which they have sealed with the tears of their eyes, and which they have consecrated with the prayers of their souls, and which they have established with the sacrifice of their lives, and which they have defended with the strength of their arms, and which they have maintained with the wisdom of their minds, and which they have secured with the power of their hands, and which they have cemented with the love of their hearts, and which they have sanctified with the devotion of their souls, and which they have made glorious with the deeds of their lives, and which they have made free with the blood of their veins, and which they have made immortal with the memory of their deaths, and which they have made sacred with the tears of their children, and which they have made holy with the prayers of their mothers, and which they have made dear with the love of their wives, and which they have made strong with the faith of their fathers, and which they have made great with the glory of their ancestors, and which they have made beautiful with the hopes of their posterity, and which they have made blessed with the favor of their God?

OLD FILES,

OLD FILES can now be recut and made as good as new. We have any amount of proof of this fact, but as one example will suffice, we refer to those from Mechanics and Millmen, who have tried them thoroughly. From a variety of experiments and improvements, we have recently made, we know that we can make old Files cut equally well as they will do as much service as they ever did if not more, and at about one half the expense.

All Files and Rasps warranted.
